

Radio Copy - Bob Dylan on 60 Minutes
Shelby Rachel Hilson
October, 2005

Bob Dylan has inspired us with his lyrics for what seems a lifetime.

His unique and poetic style has produced an ocean of memorable songs that millions of people know like the back of their hands.

In the 60's, Dylan's songs about freedom and acceptance represented an entire generation. And Dylan was viewed as a leader himself.

Although we hear him sing, we rarely hear him speak.

In his first television interview in nearly 20 years, Bob Dylan sat down with Correspondent Ed Bradley from 60 Minutes.

Like his songs, Dylan is mellow, quirky and above all interesting.

At age 63 he shows no intention of giving up the microphone.

Clip:

“Well it goes back to the destiny thing. I made a bargain with it a long time ago and I'm holding up my end.”

“What bargain was that?”

“To get where I am now.”

He is one of the biggest music legends of all time, but Bob Dylan doesn't take his success for granted.

He has recently written a memoir called Chronicles Volume One.

Dylan has also been nominated this year for a Nobel Prize in literature for song writing.